

ORLAND PARK COUPLE CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING IN ORLAND LEGION HALL

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Nicolai, widely known old time residents of Orland Park who have traveled life's path together for half a century, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Wednesday evening in the Orland Park Legion Post hall. A fine time was enjoyed by the large company present and a sumptuous dinner was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicolai were united in marriage August 7, 1885. They have four sons, Louis, Charles, Herman, William and one daughter Mrs. Augusta Hanahan and seven grandchildren.

Tinley Woman's Club Visits Oak Forest Infirmary

Eleven members and three visitors under the leadership of Mrs. Chas. Nielsen, Welfare chairman of the Tinley Park Woman's club, went on a trip through the Oak Forest Infirmary Tuesday afternoon.

Many bags and boxes of all kinds of useful material to be used by the older people, both men and women of the institution, in making articles, were taken at this time to the therapy department of the institution of Cook County who cares for the penniless old people of the county.

This department is comparably new. It was brought into being through the ingenuity of the Federation of Women's club of the Third district. Mrs. C. Brown is the woman in charge, paid by the F. W. C. who is in charge of this work. She shows and helps the old people in making useful and pretty articles, such as hooked and braided rugs, scarfs of many kinds, crochet laces, aprons, doilies, etc. The old people love to do this and it helps to while away many hours in a pleasant way. The proceeds of articles which are sold, go partly to the one who made it and partly to the Women's club to help in carrying on this useful work.

After viewing the work in the therapy department the ladies were conducted on a tour through the institution, which was acquainting the tourist with many unknown acts.

The visitors were: Mrs. Frank Kohlhaugen of Frankfort and Mrs. Beasley and little daughter of Chicago.

Wm. Schweser Dies At Home In Blue Island

Mr. Wm. Schweser died August 1 at 8:40 p. m. in the home of his youngest daughter, Mrs. Schmiedeknecht at 12752 Gregory St., Blue Island, where the mother and father have made their home for the past two years. Prior to that time, they lived for 34 years at Western and James street.

Death was caused from bronchial pneumonia and the extreme heat.

Mr. Schweser was born March 1, 1853 at Mokena, Ill., the son of George and Barbara Schweser. One sister and three brothers preceded him in death.

He was confirmed in Bachelor Grove Lutheran church April 24 1870. On March 23, 1880 he was united in marriage with Miss Louise Caroline Bauer of Blue Island in the First Evangelical Lutheran church in Blue Island.

The first 19 years of their married life was spent on a farm three quarters mile north of Mokena which was given to him by his parents.

In 1899 Mr. and Mrs. Schweser moved to Blue Island where they lived until they went to make their home with their daughter. Five years ago they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

The deceased is survived by widow, two sons; Carl and Emil; four daughters; Mrs. Clara Dahlke, Mrs. Emma Einhorn, Mrs. Louise Bloomberg and Mrs. Alvine Schmiedeknecht and six grandchildren.

Services were held at Hallinan's funeral home in Blue Island on August 5 at 2:30 p. m. The Rev. Mr. Ferne of Blue Island, officiating. Burial was in the Lutheran cemetery at Blue Island, Ill.

Orland Park Woman's Club Visit Pilcher Park

The garden tour to Joliet arranged by Mrs. Frank Moore, was even more extensive and enjoyable than had been anticipated.

On arriving at the home of Mr. Wm. Abbot in Joliet, we were invited to have our picnic dinner in a charming two-room cottage delightfully furnished for that purpose.

The tour began at the lily pools and rock gardens on the estate where we saw the rare oriental lotus of Japan and the sacred lotus of the Nile in full blossom. We let a few drops of water slide from our finger tips onto the enormous velvety leaves and watched them roll around like quicksilver.

The well-landscaped grounds were a cornfield only twenty years ago and there is now a profusion of ornamental shade trees as well as Juniper, Norway Spruce, Purple-leaved Plum and others.

It was interesting to know, realizing its extensiveness, that only three men work one-half day a week to keep it looking as it does.

We are indebted to Mr. Abbot's son, who graciously conducted us thru his own grounds and the gardens of Mr. Calamaris, Mrs. Julius Braun, Mr. Chas. Noel and Mrs. Fred Whallon, the latter of whom won first prize for the most beautiful garden in the contest sponsored by the Garden Club of Joliet.

We then went on to the greenhouses in Pilcher Park, east of Joliet, to see the James H. Ferris Cacti collection which was exhibited at the Century of Progress.

Nineteen members and eight guests went on the tour. The guests were: Mrs. Bennett, Mrs. Jennings and Miss Marion Creer of Orland; Mrs. Hugh Deadmore of Joliet; Mrs. Ralph Stellwagon, Mrs. Anton Benson of Mokena. A picture of Mrs. Benson's outdoor livingroom appeared in the May issue of Better Homes and Gardens, and Mrs. Edwin Cooper and Mrs. Haverhill of LaGrange.

A most unusual and interesting meeting is being planned for September by Mrs. Frank Moore, Garden chairman, and Mrs. George Gee, Jr., program chairman. It will be the last garden meeting of the year, so watch for details in next week's paper.

Safety Devices Asked For New Lenox Crossing

A Will County coroner's jury has made recommendations for installation of safety devices and removal of sight obstructions at two Wabash railroad crossings in New Lenox township.

Installation of warning signs at the Brisbane crossing over the Wabash tracks near New Lenox was recommended by the coroner's jury investigating the death there last July 12 of Charles Liberty, 19, of Spencer, killed when the auto in which he was riding with George Leavitt, 22, of Steger, stalled on the crossing and was struck by a Wabash passenger train.

Liberty's death was caused by skull fracture and crushing injuries the jury found.

Suggest Flicker Signal
Erection of a flicker light at Steele crossing, one mile south of New Lenox, and removal of several sheds which serve as a sight obstruction on the south side of the crossing was suggested by a jury holding inquest into the death of Lucille Etheridge, 16, of New Lenox also a victim of a train-auto crash.

The Etheridge girl was killed when the auto in which she was riding with three others was struck by a Wabash train at Steele crossing. She died of skull fracture and crushing injuries, the jury found. The Liberty inquest was conducted by Dr. E. A. Kingston, coroner, at the Fred Dames funeral home and the Etheridge inquest at the Olson funeral home.

False Alarm Brings Crowd to Tinley Board Meeting

Over 80 interested villagers attended the Tinley Park village board meeting Monday night. The reason for all this interest was over a rumor which had been current that the board was seriously thinking of letting Police Chief Harry Uthe out of office and engaging an out-of-town man for the office.

At the meeting, however, it developed that the rumor was baseless. What had occurred according to an explanation made by Mayor A. F. Habenicht, was that when Chief Uthe went on his recent vacation, the board had offered the job to any local man who would want it, and as there were no applicants, an out-of-town man was engaged.

Mayor Habenicht created some excitement when he stated that someone had fired several shots in front of his residence recently and he took this to mean that someone was threatening him.

Just why anyone should be so antagonistic to the Mayor was not explained.

When the board made no further comment about changing the police chief, the big crowd was rather disappointed as they had come to see the fire-works which failed to come off, so they went quietly home again.

Mokena Water Users Must Pay Tax On Water

With the recent enactment of the 3 per cent utilities sales tax, all consumers of gas and electricity will have the sales tax added to their monthly bills and in view of this the Mokena village board has decreed that the village water department shall not be asked to assume the tax, but to add it to the quarterly water bills, so when the Mokena water users receive their next water bills they will find the sales tax added in.

When the 2 per cent sales tax was passed the villages were required to pay this tax, but later on the villages were exempted from paying this tax on water sales, but under the 3 per cent tax the villages are obliged to pay this tax in all water sales.

State Water Board Suggests Sewer For Mokena

The Mokena village board has received a notice from the Illinois State Water board at Springfield that a complaint has been received by that office from a Mokena resident to the effect that surface water is running into basements from the streets and causing an unsanitary condition and asking the Water board to ask the Mokena village board to install a sewer system.

Clarence Claussen, technical secretary of the Water board in his letter to the Mokena board suggests that the board get busy and get in touch with Engineers and receive an estimate as to the cost of a sewer system and treating plant and take the matter up with the government, who would furnish a 45 per cent grant for such a project; the village to stand the remaining 55 per cent of the cost. Sewer rental bonds could be issued if it is suggested, in which the government would loan money at a small rate of interest.

Mr. Claussen urged the Mokena board to take this matter up now and not wait until the village population showed a decided increase. He further inferred in his letter that a sewer system may eventually have to be installed and feels that it should be done now while government money is available.

After discussing the matter, the Mokena board tabled the letter, feeling that the village is having all the expense they can handle now.

It is understood that special assessments are not being resorted to any longer in the installation of sewers, the cost being met by a government grant and sewer rental funds.

Vacant property is not assessed, but all owners of buildings wishing to connect up with the sewer are charged $25 for a tap connecting with the sewer.

CARLOAD OF ROSIN FIRED BY HEAT

The members of the train crew of a West-bound Rock Island freight train discovered smoke coming from a box car on the fore-part of the train which was stopped at Mokena, about midnight Friday. The car, loaded with rosin sizing valued at $6,000.00 was set out on a side track across from the depot. The Mokena Fire department was summoned and when the car door was opened it was discovered that a fire had started among the bags of rosin. At first only a heavy smoke pall was noticed, finally flames shot out. The fire department played a strong stream of water on the blaze and soon had it subdued. The railroad officials ordered all help possible to transfer the remaining bags into another car. The section crew was called out to do this work. After the transfer of this shipment was made it was carried to its destination to the paper mills at Morris, Ill. The car load of rosin sizing was shipped from Atlanta, Georgia. It is thought that the extremely hot weather caused a spontaneous combustion. In the makeup of the train a car of nitro acid was hooked on to one end of this freight car and a tank car of gasoline on the other. If the burning car had not been noticed in time it is through a serious wreck and fire might have resulted.

Tinley Beats Koehler A. C. And Mokena

On account of being late for the press for the ball game played at Goeseville Sunday, July 28th, you get two good baseball games in one issue.

Tinley Park baseball team traveled to Goeseville Sunday, July 28th to take the second game from the Koehler A. C.'s by a score of 9 to 7. Some good base ball was seen at this ball park both by Tinley Park and Koehler boys, the score was a one-sided affair until the 7th inning when the boys from Goeseville stepped out and picked themselves up 5 runs to take the lead 7 to 6, but this was overcome very easily in the first of the eighth when Tinley came right back with 3 runs to make the score 9 to 7 at which time Earhart relieved Frank as pitcher for Tinley and held the Koehler boys to the finish.

The feature of the game was a home run by Fletcher when he drove the ball over the right fielder's head, this was something for the man from Brier Crest to crow about for he has been trying to get one for three years and as old age is coming on fast it was no easy matter for him to circle the bases with the old bones kind of stiff in the joints; it was figured that he picked them up and layed them down 329 1/2 times to circle the bases... Only for the coaching of our local Barber it would have been impossible.

The box score:

NATIONAL TOPICS INTERPRETED

By William Bruckart

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—President Roosevelt has settled a controversy by the simple expedient of transferring two men from responsible positions in the Virgin Islands to jobs in Washington. He has taken Paul M. Pearson from the post of civil governor of the Virgin Islands and has made him assistant director of housing in the Interior department and has transferred Federal Director Judge T. Webster Wilson from his post in the islands to the federal parole board here in Washington. Each man has accepted his new appointment and in so far as a current controversy is concerned, the book is closed.

It will be recalled that Governor Pearson and Judge Wilson long have been at loggerheads over Virgin island affairs. The battle was bitter. It came to a head when Paul Yates, executive assistant to the governor and a former Washington correspondent, resigned his job and came back here with a bag full of charges against his former chief. The Yates allegations ranged all the way from minor charges of poor judgment to gross accusations. He succeeded in getting a senate committee investigation and it was at that time that the Pearson-Wilson feud flared so openly that administration officials here were dragged in and the whole scope of differences aired.

As a matter of fact there is every reason to believe that Governor Pearson was far from a successful executive in the islands. He frequently aroused the ire of natives and, according to testimony adduced by the senate investigation, had very little to show for the sums of money he expended in attempting to give the Virgin islands a new lease on life. All of the information tends to establish that the islands continue to be "an effectual poorhouse" just as President Hoover described them on the occasion of a visit during his term as Chief Executive.

But Governor Pearson had his supporters in the administration. Chief among these was Secretary Ickes whose department is responsible for administration of the islands. Just why Mr. Ickes has been so enthusiastic about Governor Pearson's regime is not fully disclosed in any evidence here except that the interior secretary has certain ideas about social reform that some unkind critics refer to as pure socialism which Governor Pearson had been attempting to impose upon the island inhabitants. Governor Pearson has expended vast sums of PWA funds in the islands in his efforts to carry out the Ickes program of reform. It seems, however, that the schemes were not as practical as they might have been and so trouble started in a rather extensive fashion.

The President stayed outside of the row until in the course of the senate inquiry Senator Tydings, a Maryland Democrat and usually an anti-Roosevelt Democrat, received a letter from Mr. Ickes. Mr. Ickes accused the investigating chairman with having whitewashed a witness whose testimony was all anti-Ickes and anti-Pearson. The senator flared up in a big way at that letter. His reply is likely to become a classic in official correspondence. He did not mince his words. After voicing his general conception of the attitude exhibited by Mr. Ickes and accusing him of attempting to interfere in the investigation, Senator Tydings informed the interior secretary that he may as well attempt to run the Department of the Interior and let the senators run the senate. He used just about those words.

That was the signal for Mr. Roosevelt to take a hand. It was easy to see that a few outbursts of that kind and Mr. Ickes might have found himself in a splendid position to resign from the cabinet. So the President got the feudists into his office, singly of course, and when those conferences were over the senate investigation into the Virgin island situation was suspended for two weeks. The transfer of Governor Pearson and Judge Wilson resulted.

One might properly inquire why all of this agitation has occurred about the Virgin Islands. They are many hundreds of miles from Washington. They lie in the Caribbean sea, considerably out of the usual pathway of ships; they are populated by about 22,000 individuals, 95 per cent of whom are negroes and may generally be described as a "backward" place.

They may have some military and naval value. That has never been fully demonstrated. But the fact remains they are possessions of the United States and if our government is to be their protector, it is responsible for a sane administration of their affairs.

The Washington fight may have had its start in the Virgin islands, but it has progressed beyond that point and is a domestic battle now. It is safe to say that for 18 years, which is the time the islands have been under United States rule, there has been a dire need for a plan of government suited to those people. Each year congress has been appropriating thousands of dollars for the island government and each year there has been miserably little in the way of improvement to show for these funds.

Almost as frequently as congress has appropriated money it has made changes in the administration methods in use there. There has never been a long term program laid out and there has been nothing whatsoever done showing the sympathy of a so-called intellectual people as we claim to be for those downtrodden masses that populate the Virgin Islands.

All of this, it seems to me, shows the woeful need for careful consideration of that situation. It seems to me equally apparent that as long as congress keeps meddling in and as long as politicians from the mainland are sent there purely on a political basis we will continue to have a pack of trouble bundled up in those Virgin islands.

Several attempts have been made to work out a governmental system worth while but the politicians are not among those who will let plums escape. It is certain, therefore, that the Pearson-Wilson-Ickes-Tydings battle royal is an outcropping of what amounts to a festering sore in American governmental policy.

If congress continues in session past August 15, and it is now apparent that it may run to September 1, it will have been in session 225 days, some two weeks longer than the average of the so-called long sessions of congress. Prior to adoption of the "lame duck" amendment which did away with sessions of unequal length, the shorter sessions of congress averaged about 170 days. The longer terms were around 215 days before final adjournment was taken. Thus, the current session stands in a fair way to be among the list of hardy sessions.

All of which is by way of saying that the current session of congress has worn down its members both physically and mentally to an extent quite unusual. I was talking a few days ago with a veteran senator, a man who has served almost 25 years in the upper house of congress. He is known as a physically strong individual and usually lasts very well through the work that piles up before senators and representatives. I inquired of him concerning the general health of congress and his reply was:

"I regret to say we are just a bunch of debilitated old men, incapable of doing the job that is expected of us and everyone is hoping against hope that we can live through this work and this heat."

As a result of that conversation the thought came to me that there was an answer to the oft repeated declaration that members of congress fail to earn their salaries of $10,000 per year. I have observed congressional proceedings almost a score of years and it is my mature conviction that few times in that period has congress failed to earn its salt.

There is another reason why congressional sessions should not run so long and should not be carried on in the intense heat of a Washington summer.

One condition nearly always has obtained near the close of a long session. As the days drag by, persons with axes to grind and individual interests to serve have a way of digging up questionable bills that theretofore had been side-tracked and assumed to be dead. With resistance low, the average senator or representative is unable to fight off legislation which he knows to be bad with the same spirit that accompanied his activities earlier in the session. Likewise, he is unable to battle as successfully as before for legislation which he knows to be good.

This condition opens the way for a revival of lobbies. They are back in Washington in numbers now despite the disclosures being made by the two congressional committees that are investigating the lobbies that operated to defeat, temporarily at least, the legislation killing utility holding companies. One would have assumed justly with the investigations under way after the utility legislation was passed that lobbyists and self-serving representatives would have been frightened away from Washington. Such was not the case. They are here in such numbers that some observers believe Mr. Roosevelt has made a mistake in demanding that congress stay until it has enacted the share-the-wealth-tax bill and the legislation which will prohibit lawsuits against the government for damages resulting from abrogation of the promise in government bonds to pay them in gold. Mr. Roosevelt is insisting on these laws. He will get them. But in the opinion of many authorities he stands a fair chance also of getting some other legislation which he may not want.

ILLINOIS BREVITIES

Mrs. Thomas Matthew, twenty-eight, of Rochester, and her seven-year-old daughter Marjorie were fatally burned when the mother tossed gasoline on the fire at home.

Charles Moore, forty-three, one of the owners of the Klondike Coal company of Prairie town, was killed when he fell from a basket in which men were engaged in retimbering the air shaft.

Dr. Grover C. Brown, Jasper county Democratic chairman, has been appointed managing officer of the Jacksonville State hospital, Director A. L. Bowen of the department of public welfare announced.

Thomas Burrus, ninety-two, Civil war veteran who served in Company A, Eleventh Illinois regular infantry, died at his home at Herrick. Five sons, three daughters and a large number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren survive.

A Civil war tragedy was bared when a dredge on historic McPike island in the Mississippi river near Alton dug up the skeletons of three confederate soldiers. The bones, discovered beneath a partly uprooted tree, had been dislodged during dredging operations which are destroying the island to obtain material for an earth dike in the construction of the $10,000,000 federal navigation bridge there.

The bill providing for a drivers' license law will come up on Governor Horner's call list at the special session of the legislature, probably to be held in September, according to George W. Fleming, secretary of the civic safety organization. Every effort will be made to draw a bill which will have the unanimous support of both the senate and the house, he states, so that, when introduced, the measure will be passed promptly.

A co-operative agreement for the preparation of material for an industrial and geographic atlas of Illinois has been entered into by the Geographic Society of Chicago and the Illinois state department of registration and education, Col. Tryggve A. Siqueland, president of the Geographic society, announced. Data for the work will cover the natural resources of the state, the lines of commerce, industries and other information.

A fast Chicago and North Western railroad passenger train struck an automobile at a crossing in Palatine, killing all the members of a family, including the father, mother, and two young daughters. A sister of the father escaped injury when she jumped clear just before the engine of the train demolished their car. The dead were: Albert Jacobs, thirty-four years old, who lived one mile and a half south of Palatine; his wife, Hennie, thirty-two years old; and their children, Esther, nine years old; and Mary Anne, four years old.

Fire which swept the huge $4,000,000 Hiram Walker distillery in Peoria following a terrific explosion was brought under control after causing damage estimated at $2,700,000. One employee, John Bardon, was killed and a dozen were hurt. Six million gallons of whisky were set afire, sending greenish-yellow flames high into the sky. Rackhouse No. 3, where the blast occurred, was destroyed. The six-story steel building fell to pieces under the intense heat. Other structures were seriously damaged.

Governor Horner has under advisement recommendations for rehabilitating prisoners in state institutions as contained in a report made by Col. Henry Barrett Chamberlain, operating director of the Chicago crime commission, after a study of the state's parole and prison systems. Erection of another penitentiary because of overcrowding, especially at the Joliet and Stateville institutions, is one of the recommendations. Others are for the establishment of a "real" reformatory and increased appropriations for the diagnostic depots at Joliet and Chester, where men under sentence are studied at the start of their terms.

Three robbers who identified themselves as Chicagoans were captured single-handed by Sheriff William Maier of Kendall county after two of them had been wounded in the holdup of a tavern west of Gardner in Grundy county. The arrest was made at a cross road near Yorkville, 35 miles north of the tavern. Entering the tavern, the men announced their intention to "clean out the place." Mary Dickens, twenty-year-old daughter of the proprietor, A. H. Dickens, backed into a rear room and told her father the tavern was being robbed. Dickens seized his shotgun and fired at the trio as they fled without loot in their car. Two hours later Sheriff Maier, who had been notified and given a description of the robbers' car, saw it approaching. Drawing his revolver, he leaped on the running board, and forced the men to drive to the county jail at Yorkville.

Believed maddened by heat, a herd of 20 cows on the farm of Glenn Metcalfe, near Warren, stampeded when being driven to a barn and crashed through a fence, falling over a 50-foot precipice into a small stream. Several were killed.

William H. Hoke of Wing, fifty-four, is dead of bullet wounds, and Fred W. Garrison, forty-six, owner of a store, is in the Livingston county jail at Pontiac—all because a dog killed some chickens and the owner of the poultry killed the dog. Garrison, according to Sheriff Edward Kammermann, admits killing Hoke.

HURRICANE HAZARD

"IT IS small wonder," I said musingly, "that hotels catering to seasonal trade are inclined to charge high rates for what they offer. Why, take here in Miami, for example. The season can hardly be called longer than three months, four at the most. During the remaining eight, or nine months all these hotels are vacant. There is absolutely no revenue for maintenance cost, taxes, insurance and the dozens of other expenses such a project entails."

Beside me, Col. Joel Tucker chuckled at some memory my words revived. The colonel and I are friends of long standing. Today we were seated on the veranda of his winter home at Miami beach looking out over a brassy sea, overshadowed by a leaden, cloudless sky. It was early May. The tourist season was past. An atmosphere of desolation and forlornness hung over the city.

The day was hot, though the mercury was considerably less than the average northerner is apt to think of it being in Florida, between May and November. A gentle breeze swept up from the water, and was cooled in the shade of palm trees and oleanders before reaching the veranda. To the right the top stories of the famous Beach hotel were visible above a fringe of cocoanut palms. It was sight of this man-made structure that had prompted my remark, for Boris Flake, its owner, is a close friend of the colonel, hence one with whom I am inclined to sympathize.

Colonel Tucker set fire to a long black cigar and crossed his legs atop the veranda railing.

"Back in 1926," he said, "the city of Miami was nearly wiped off the map by a hurricane. You remember it. Worst storm on record. Hundreds of buildings whisked away as if they had been so many cardboard boxes. Thousands of dollars worth of property utterly ruined. The extent of the damage reached an astounding figure."

"It was a setback to Miami and adjacent cities. It meant years of work to rebuild what had been destroyed. And worse still it meant the greater undertaking of dispelling in the minds of outsiders, who had been in the habit of coming to Florida during the winter, the idea that such a storm was apt to repeat itself during the tourist season. Even now your northern papers announce that Miami is being swept by a hurricane every time the wind blows at a slightly greater than normal velocity. Up in New England you can have high tides, blizzards and 100-mile-an-hour gales and they'll never be called any more than a bad storm."

"However, Miami was confronted with the job of overcoming the hurricane hazard. She had to convince you northerners that there was a season for hurricanes and that season began in late August, and ended in late October. And, second, she had to do something to assure the folks who sometimes stayed down here during the summer months, that in the event of a second storm such as that in 1926 there were shelters that could withstand the ravages."

"Boris Flake built the first hurricane-proof hotel. (And incidentally there haven't been many built since.) It cost him thousands of dollars, in fact several thousand more than he had anticipated. When the thing was done he discovered his finances exhausted and his creditors pressing. Hopeful of realizing a profit on his investment, however, he held on during the winter season of 1927, only to discover that either the storm of the previous year had scared off the tourist trade, or Miami wasn't going to be the popular winter resort that natives had bragged about. At any rate, business wasn't so brisk that winter, and by the end of the season his financial condition hadn't improved to any marked degree."

"The outlook seemed pretty black. Boris decided to stay on the ground during the summer, however, and spend his idle time in concocting some plan whereby he could retrieve some of his investment. An old hand at the hotel game is Boris; thoughts of admitting defeat were too humiliating to be considered."

"During August of that summer Boris got a break. Weather authorities predicted that a hurricane of great velocity was making up in the Caribbean and was heading straight for Miami. The report got around that the city was again doomed. Government officials advised every one to either get out of the city or take shelter in some building that could withstand the storm."

"Folks began to look around for such a building, and it wasn't long before they discovered that Boris' Beach hotel was the only structure in town guaranteed hurricane-proof. The result was quite astounding, and satisfying to Boris. Before he realized what was happening more than half of the rooms in his hotel were engaged by frightened citizens. At this point he awoke to the situation and auctioned off the remaining beds at prices that were higher than his winter rates."

"For more than two weeks the beach was filled to capacity, while the predicted hurricane went prancing around the Atlantic, and finally sheered off the coast by reason of some climatic fluke, and spent itself at sea."

"But Boris was grateful. The money that he had taken in was clear velvet."

Moreover, the incident served as a splendid advertisement. The name of the Beach was emblazoned on the front pages of newspapers all over the country as the only hotel in which hundreds of people sought refuge against the anticipated hurricane.

"Boris opened up the next December and did a normal business throughout the winter. However, by spring he was still in the red and his creditors were pressing harder than ever. If it hadn't been for the fact that the next August another hurricane was predicted and the Beach enjoyed a repetition of the previous summer's business, he would likely have had to board up the doors and windows. But with the profits received from frightened hurricane escapers, he managed to stall off the creditors, and was able to open up for his third season."

The colonel paused in the telling of his tale and, looked out across the lawn and over the fringe of cocoanut palms toward the top stories of the famous Beach hotel. I saw the twinkle in the old man's eyes and said: "Boris was never closed out, then? The hotel is prosperous now; a paying proposition?"

Colonel Tucker nodded. "No," he said thoughtfully, "no, Boris never had to close up. But it was the summer trade that kept him going; still is, as a matter of fact. He couldn't compete with the other hotels during the winter because his overhead was so great." He paused, and the twinkle developed into a smile. "Every August, now, folks move into the Beach and stay there until after the hurricane season is over. Boris makes a regular business of the trade, sells his rooms out in advance and has never failed to have a full house."

"Which means," I suggested, "that, every summer, weather officials predict a storm making up in the Caribbean and heading toward Miami with disastrous intent. That hardly seems possible."

Colonel Tucker nodded amusedly. "It isn't possible, and yet the rumor somehow gets around." He paused abruptly, looked at me with a shrewd expression in his eyes. There was also in his tone a note of reprimand. "Didn't I just tell you that Boris was an old and accomplished hand at the hotel game?" Suddenly he laughed. "Excuse me. I forgot we three are all good friends. You see, the weather officials don't always report the coming of a destructive storm during August. But Boris does."

Additional Coinages for Estonia, Finland, Poland

Several of the post-war states in the Baltic region have added to their coinages. From Estonia appears a new one-kroon piece in aluminum bronze to replace the one-kroon silver coin minted in 1933. The obverse shows an ancient ship of the Viking type, reminiscent of the days when the Estonians, along with the Norse and Finnish sea-rovers, were the scourge of the more peaceable nations to the west. The reverse bears the shield of the country with the inscription "Eesti Vabariik" and the date.

Finland has issued a large 20-markkaa piece, also of aluminum bronze. The obverse shows the well-known Lion of Finland encircled by a wreath of pine needles and cones, with the date at bottom. The reverse bears the denomination and the inscription "Suomen Tasavalta."

The metal, aluminum bronze, used for these pieces is a new alloy for coinage purposes and has been commonly used since the World war as a substitute for silver, especially in those countries which have suffered severe currency depreciation. It was first extensively employed by the French for the Chamber of Commerce tokens of 2, 1 and 1/2 franc pieces issued in 1920. The metal is a golden color when new, but changes to a brassy hue with use. The proportions of the alloy in the Finnish coins are 92 per cent copper, 6 per cent aluminum and 2 per cent nickel.

New 5 and 10 zloty pieces from Poland show a bold profile of Marshal Pilsudski, emphasized by the lack of any inscription other than an almost microscopic date placed beneath his shoulder. The reverse shows a small crudely fashioned Polish eagle in a burst of rays and surrounded at some distance from the edge by the inscription "Rzeczpospolita Polska," with the value at bottom. Marshal Pilsudski's portrait appeared on stamp issues some years ago, but these are the first coins to bear the portrait of Poland's national hero.

"Most Accurate" Clocks Made

Declared to be the four most accurate clocks in the world, novel timepieces are being exhibited by the Reichs Institute for Physics in Berlin, where they were made. They are operated by the vibrations of a quartz crystal, and are said to deviate from the right time only 0.002 seconds in six months. The crystal is hung in a vacuum glass tube which is placed inside a box surrounded by a second box. The walls of both boxes are composed of copper tubes, air, aluminum and feathers, which keep the temperature within unchanged. An electric current is sent through the crystal which vibrates 60,000 times a second, and these vibrations influence an alternating current which keeps the clock going.

Deciding on Name U. S. A.

The name United States of America was agreed to by the Constitutional convention on August 7, 1787, in considering the report of the committee of detail. The selection of this name was logical, since it was composed of states which were uniting, and the whole country was commonly termed America.

SYNOPSIS

To the little town of Heron River comes Anna ("Silver") Grenoble, daughter of "Gentleman Jim," formerly of the community, known as a gambler, news of whose murder in Chicago has reached the town. Sophronia Willard, Jim Grenoble's sister, is at the depot to meet Silver. Her household consists of her husband, and stepsons, Roderick and Jason. The Willards own only half of the farm, the other half being Anna Grenoble's.

But had he been here now he might have prepared himself for Silver's arrival. It would go hard with Roddy if she meant to sell her land for cash. But if she could be persuaded to accept a fair rental . . . Sophronia resolved to take the bull by the horns and suggest it to her before Roddy got home.

The train came to a stop in Heron River. People crowded forward, looking eagerly along the line of coaches. Perhaps for the most part they did not know just what they expected to see when Silver Grenoble stepped down upon the platform.

What they did see was a tallish, thin girl in a tailored suit of dove-gray silk and a felt hat of the same color—a hat that showed beneath it a white, immobile face and enormous dark eyes, and plainly dressed hair that seemed colorless. For a moment she stood looking uncertainly about, and then Sophronia Willard advanced upon her with her black-gloved hand outstretched.

Shad Finney, craning a little, saw an unmistakable tear glide down the older woman's weathered cheek.

A porter had deposited on the platform two traveling bags of fine black leather, a name stamped on each in silver. Two little boys scampered up to the cases and read the name loudly enough for all to hear.

A murmur moved about the platform. "She goes by the name of Silver, eh? Kind o' funny."

Shad Finney and Nils Ulevik stood at a decent distance, their watery old eyes taking in the scene. They saw the girl seize one of the traveling bags, Sophronia the other. A baggage man spoke to them about a trunk that had been taken off the train, and after a word of instruction, Sophronia moved away with Silver to the steps at the head of the platform.

Jess Melbank had risen from her bench and had ambled forward, to stand surveying the strange girl up and down as she advanced. Sophronia ignored her, and one might have thought that Silver Grenoble did not see either her or anyone else in that gathering.

But just as the two women reached the platform steps, Duke Melbank cleared his throat with a long, profound rumble, and then coughed lightly behind his hand. A titter arose. Sophronia, setting down the suitcase she carried, swung about.

"That was you, wasn't it, Duke?" she said in her explosive voice.

"Me what?" Duke asked innocently. "It was him," a small boy piped, and darted behind his mother's skirts.

"You know what I mean," Sophronia said loudly. "It was you that coughed."

"Can't a guy cough?" Duke demanded with an injured air.

Sophronia Willard was not one to mince matters. Her long arm shot forward, and her large, bony fist came accurately home just beneath the soft cleft of Duke Melbank's chin. A gasp rose from the crowd. Duke reeled backward, struck his shoulder blade against the depot wall and uttered a sound half way between a grunt and a whine.

Phronie stood back from him, her face alight with satisfaction. She was about to turn away when Jess Melbank, with amazing alacrity for one of her weight, suddenly stepped between Phronie and Duke.

Jess screamed maledictions. She shook her fist in Sophronia's face. Her language was of the cellar of cellars. She knew—everybody else in Heron River knew—that the daughter of Jim Grenoble was! Small boys stood rooted, little girls sped back in terror. Women turned pale and men's mouths twisted. But Jess Melbank did not strike Phronie Willard. And Phronie remained motionless as granite. While Jess was drawing breath to begin anew, Phronie turned haughtily away, swept up the suitcase and led Silver down the steps. The two old men saw the women get into the old Willard car and vanish down the street.

There had been a moment of dead silence. But now there was the unpleasant babble of human voices. Shad hooked his arm in Nils Ulevik's, and the two made off, sickened a little, wondering much.

CHAPTER II

On that night in July, a night that was moonless but whitely lambent with stars, a southwest wind moved in sultry indolence up across the stupendous void of Dakota, and thence across the state line and over farm lands suddenly lush with yield. It lightly touched Roddy Willard's cheek and stirred his dark, uncovered hair as he drove his car toward Heron River. His thoughts were so intense that every now and then the motor came almost to a halt on the narrow, winding road. At such times he would impatiently apply his foot to the accelerator and continue for a while at a reckless speed.

He did not see the road before him. He saw rather the monotonous panorama of his own life, unrolling backward to the years of his adolescence, when his father had sold the farm in the adjoining county, married Sophronia Grenoble, and moved to the Grenoble place, half of which had become his property. "Gentleman Jim" Grenoble, when he had begun his life of vagabondage, had refused to relinquish his section. But now in the foreground of that panorama, bright and excitingly strange, was the face of Corinne Meader.

In one week Corinne would be his wife.

He saw her face as he had seen it that first day, in an ice cream parlor, an hour after he had registered at the State Agricultural college, seven years ago. He had been twenty, older than most of the entrants, and Corinne was seventeen, a freshman in arts at the university. Harry Richter had introduced them, and even now, after everything that had happened, Roddy's heart beat oppressively again as he recalled the widening of Corinne's brown eyes and her slow, thorough survey of him. She had hesitated for a moment and then, glancing with a curious smile at his hand, she had extended her own and in his huge, hard grasp it had been swallowed completely. He had kept his eyes fastened dumbly upon her face and had seen her lids droop in a way that could have been nothing but deliberate coquetry. Roddy had blushed furiously as he heard Harry Richter's amused laugh.

She was the daughter of the banker in Ballantyne. It was something of a wonder that he, Roddy Willard, should have taken her to the movies and to dances a number of times during their college career, a little bewildered, a little uncertain, and very much flattered by the occasional, capricious preference she showed him over all the other admirers who flocked about her.

One summer vacation she had driven over from a house party on Twin Deer lake and had found Roddy on the Willard farm, anxiously ministering to a sick horse in the pasture. Later, Corinne had sat in Sophronia's parlor and had glanced about at the walls. A few days later he had substituted some etchings and water-colors for his stepmother's horrible objects d'art. But Corinne had never come again, and afterwards Roddy had been a little ashamed of his snobbery in removing Phronie's treasures, even though, truth to tell, the walls were more pleasing without the burnt leather image of Pocahontas with the calendar beneath.

Roddy wondered now why it was that he had never kissed Corinne during those years while he was seeing her frequently. Perhaps it was his own humility. Perhaps it was because he suspected that it was his physical self alone that appealed to her, and that beyond the satisfaction of an established conquest she would have no use for him. He was in earnest where Corinne was concerned, and he had been afraid of discovering that she was not in earnest about him.

But he knew now that she had been in earnest. A month ago, the local papers had made much of the failure of the bank in Ballantyne, though all had absolved from blame old Edwin Meader, Corinne's father. Roddy had had a number of letters from Corinne after that, and their tone had become increasingly despondent. What was she to do? Her father was completely broken. Her mother had fifty dollars a month of her own to live on. Corinne, who had been one of the Ballantyne smart set, had made efforts to get a position at teaching, even in a country school, but the school boards were flooded with applications. Her last letter had been one of complete despair.

When, early this morning, Roddy had set out for Ballantyne in his car, he had had the curious feeling that the sun was a little too bright, that he could not see as clearly as he had been used to do, over undulating prairies that he knew as well as he knew his own face. But there had been a tense excitement about that journey, and when he had come to its end he had seen Corinne, small and beautifully made, and Corinne's brown eyes with their look of helpless appeal—and within an hour, beneath the grape arbor of the Meader place, he had asked her to marry him. He had told her that he hoped to get the Grenoble land, a richer tract than his own, and that after a while life on a farm would not be as harsh as it was being painted just now.

Corinne had seemed frightened and abashed and timid and thrilled. Then she had thrown her arms about his neck and sobbed that she had always loved him and that she would marry him as soon as he wished.

Her mother, a plump, pink little woman, with soft hands and a disposition to ignore the catastrophe that had befallen the Meaders, gave them her blessing with a bright gaiety that admitted not the least suspicion of any incongruity in the match. Corinne, of course, must have a proper wedding, even if things were bad. "A quiet little wedding here at home," Mrs. Meader said briskly. "The Congregational church is too big and cold."

Roddy had seen through Mrs. Meader's little pretext. But Corinne had looked across at him with widening amusement in her eyes, and he had gravely suppressed a grin.

He had spent the day with the Meaders, although he was uncomfortable with pity for old Edwin, who sat, oblivious of all that went on about him, in a chair in his study.

Thus it had happened. Roddy pulled himself erect in his car as he came to the turn in the road that led westward past Twin Deer lake. Over there, a mile or so across brush and prairie, blinked the dozen street lights of Heron River. By this time, he reflected, the usual crowd would have left the village and gone their ways. He turned his car away from the highway and headed for the village.

People seated on their screened verandas in the town of Ballantyne observed that a faint breeze had sprung up from the southwest, and although it was pleasant after the heat of the day, it might mean rain for the morning. With harvest so near at hand . . .

But Corinne Meader, undressing in her mauve and white bedroom, was grateful for the breeze that caressed her hot throat and temples from the open window. She brushed her hair with hurried strokes. But her own beauty—which had availed her nothing!—stared back at her from her mirror, and presently she leaned forward on her palms and gazed long and intently at her own image.

"And so—you are going to marry a farmer, my dear!" her lips said softly. Mrs. Meader opened the door, closed it behind her, and stole into a chair beside Corinne's dressing table as though some conspiracy were afoot.

"Darling," the mother breathed, "you won't mind my sitting for a minute while you get ready for bed? I'm—I'm just as excited as though it were I who was getting married! It's all so unexpected—I had no idea! But Roddy is a dear, Corinne—a perfect dear!"

"He's awfully good-looking," Corinne said with forbearance, and continued to wing out her hair with her brush.

"And he has quite a large farm, too, hasn't he?" Mrs. Meader was saying. "And quite near Maynard. It isn't as though you were going to be marooned on some backwoods homestead for the rest of your days. You can drive over to see us often, too, after you're married."

"I suppose so," Corinne conceded. "Oh, dear—it's going to be terrible giving up this house, darling—if it comes to that. After all these years! But I mustn't talk about such things now—and you so happy."

"You won't have to give up the house, now that I'm provided for," Corinne reminded her cynically.

Mrs. Meader chose to let that pass. "Of course," she observed, "if you had married Sylvester Edgett when he asked you—"

"Mother!" Corinne squealed. "His pimples!"

Mrs. Meader gave a deprecating little laugh. "I didn't mean that seriously, darling, you know that. And anyhow, he's only a bookkeeper."

Corinne, although she was still addressing herself, spoke aloud. "Yes, I could have married Sylvester. Or I could go now and clerk at eleven dollars a week in Ellingboe's dry goods store. And all the girls in town could come in and ask for samples of white satin, and gisles, and tell me it's for their wedding dresses! No, thanks, I'd rather die than do that."

Mrs. Meader put a plump arm about Corinne's shoulders, and a round, bright tear trembled on her pink cheek.

"My baby!" she quavered. "To think I am going to lose you—and so soon! And to think that the bank had to—fall before you got settled in your own home. It's just too—cruel!"

"Now, mother," Corinne said with supreme patience, "don't do that!"

"All right. I'm sorry, darling," her mother whispered, and dabbed her nose with a bit of lace and chiffon. "But I can't help thinking of all the chances you've had to marry well—of course they weren't good enough! But if Harry Richter's father hadn't been so against Harry's marrying just now—"

Corinne stood up, sighed. "Please, mother! You're talking as though I were being sold in a slave market. Harry knows what he wants. It's his father's business he wants—and his father's money—not me. Anyhow, I'm not in love with Harry. It's just that you've been expecting great things of me—and the miracle didn't come off! Now, be a good girl and go to bed. I'm tired."

She kissed her mother, and with her arms about her propelled her gently toward the door. Mrs. Meader murmured a reluctant and tender good night and Corinne was alone.

She went back to the oval glass of her ivory dressing-table. When she glanced at her reflection, it was with a small, curled smile of satisfaction, in contemplating the fine tapering of her eyebrows, the back-sweep of glossy waves, patrician-wise, from her forehead, and the natural, provocative pout of her red lips.

Finally, she lit a cigarette, got into bed, and switched off the light. She stretched out sinuously, enjoying the smoke and the smooth coolness of the fine linen sheets, and thinking luxuriously, with frank, rather delicious excitement, of Roddy Willard.

CHAPTER III

Sophronia Willard had driven a half mile from the limits of Heron River before she spoke to the girl who sat beside her, straight and white as an icicle.

Then Phronie said, between her long white teeth, "D—n them! The ignoramus. Don't you mind 'em, child! You've done nothin' wrong. Don't you let 'em scare you!"

The girl laughed softly. Sophronia glanced at her in surprise, and thought suddenly that she looked in some way much more than nineteen.

"I'm not a child, Aunt Sophronia," she said. Her voice was low and oddly measured, as though she herself were listening to it. "They didn't frighten me. I am only sorry they upset you on my account."

Phronie was discomfited and a bit irritated. "They get away with too much, those gals!" she said loudly. "A stranger can't come here that they don't act up like a pack of hoodlums!"

Silver did not reply. Her aunt ventured a glance at her as she jerked the old car around a corner. The girl's face, with its rather small features, was like marble, no life in anything but her eyes, and they stared straight ahead of her as though she saw something nameless beyond the dark of the windshield. Qualms were unusual with Phronie, but she experienced them now.

"But we won't do any talking tonight, Silver," she said presently. "You must get a good rest. I am sorry Roddy—he's my eldest stepson—I'm sorry he's away in the good car. This is an awful rattle-trap for you to be comin' home in!"

Silver seemed to have been thinking her own thoughts. "Your stepson—Roddy," she ventured, "will he mind very much—my coming?"

"He won't mind anything, unless you sell your land to a cash buyer," Sophronia said grimly, and then could have bitten her tongue out. She had just said that tonight they wouldn't do any talking!

"I don't think I shall want to sell the land, Aunt Sophronia," Silver said monotonously. "If you will just let me stay with you, I'll be ever so grateful."

Sophronia's heart leaped. Well, if it was going to be as simple as that!

"Stay!" she exclaimed. "Isn't this your rightful home? And ain't I your closest kin? I'd be a fine one, I would, if I didn't insist on your living with me!"

"Thank you, Aunt Sophronia," Silver said. "I can't say any more."

"You don't need to," Sophronia remarked tersely. "And don't call me 'Sophronia'! It's too much like me. I get 'Phronie' from them that likes me. You can cut out the 'aunt,' too. It makes me feel old."

"Phronie," Silver repeated thoughtfully. "Dad called you that, but I wasn't sure—"

Phronie was not particularly intuitive, but she sensed that the girl Silver had drawn back into that curious immobility of hers.

Out of the sultry darkness, old Roderick came toward them from the big house, where one light was burning in the living room. Sophronia saw his arms outstretched toward Jim's daughter, and heard the booming greeting of his voice, and was suddenly afraid. But Jim's daughter did not break down. There was something uncanny about the girl, Sophronia thought in confusion.

In the house, Phronie relieved Silver Grenoble of her wraps and the men took her luggage upstairs. With the firm belief in the efficacy of food to dull the sharp edge of grief, Phronie then busied herself preparing a plate of sandwiches. Jason went to the cooler in the vegetable cellar outside, and brought in a stone jug of ginger beer, while old Roderick kept Silver company in the living room.

When Sophronia returned with the sandwiches, she saw a bit of color on Silver's cheeks, and although her eyes were darting about the room like dark flames, they were no longer the eyes of some stricken animal.

Sophronia placed the sandwiches and glasses on the table with its crocheted dolly, and Jason poured ginger beer into the glasses.

"Now, Silver," she said stoutly, "you must have a bite. That darned old car must have played you out—it sure did me."

The men helped themselves, reaching out to the decked table in painful fastidiousness with their large brown hands.

Sophronia took in Silver's appearance in detail. The girl was slender, but not as frail as Phronie had at first supposed. Her eyes were probably a very dark blue, although by the light of the acetylene lamp they seemed almost black. Her hair was what would be called ash-blond, she decided, and it waved slightly and was dressed in a plain fashion low upon her neck.

Then Sophronia looked about the room and saw it, in a twinkling, as she had not seen it in years. She saw it now because she was wondering what Jim's daughter was thinking about it.

Lesson for August 11

DANIEL

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1:8-20.
GOLDEN TEXT—Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God?—1 Corinthians 6:19.
PRIMARY TOPIC—How Daniel Grew Strong.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Ten Times Strong.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Obeying the Laws of Health.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Motives for Total Abstinence.

The lesson committee has designated this lesson, "Temperance and Health." In the use of this as a temperance lesson it must be borne in mind that it is temperance in the sense of self-mastery, rather than having to do with indulgence in intoxicating liquors. Daniel's self-mastery was due to his right relation and loyalty to his God. It is utterly futile to hope to enforce a program of temperance upon those who are in rebellion against God.

I. Daniel in Captivity in Babylon (vv. 1-4).

Daniel with his companions were carried away to Babylon in the first siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. At the command of the king, certain choice young men were carried away because they were "skillful in wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science," that they might be trained to stand in the king's palace.

II. Daniel's Trials (vv. 5-7).

1. Conscience tested (v. 5). By the appointment of the king, a daily provision was arranged of the king's meat and wine for Daniel and his companions. This was contrary to the custom among the godly Jews. Being contrary to the Jewish customs they could not conscientiously partake of them.

2. The change of name (vv. 6, 7). Among the Hebrews names were given to children when they were most significant. Daniel means "God is my Judge." The significance of this name is that all the problems of life were submitted to God for a decision. God was made the arbitrator of his life. His name was changed to Belshazzar, which means "Bel's prince." It meant, therefore, one whom the chief god of the Babylonians favored. Hananiah means "gift or beloved of Jehovah." His name was changed to Shadrach, which signified "illuminated by the sun god, Rach." Meshach means "who is as God?" His name was changed to Meshach, which means "who is like the goddess, Sheshach, the gentle one?" Azariah means "Jehovah is our help." This was changed to Abed-nego, which means "the servant of Nego." Back of the change of names was the attempt of Satan to wipe out the name of the true God.

III. Daniel's Courtesy (vv. 8-13).

Daniel seems to have been the spokesman for the company. Although his heart was fixed, he did not forget to be a gentleman. He requested to be excused from this meat and drink in order that he be not defiled. We should learn from this that in times even of great trials we should be courteous. When Daniel asked that a test be made as to the effect of the food upon the countenance of himself and companions, gracious consideration was given to them.

IV. Daniel's Triumph (vv. 14-21).

1. As to physical health (vv. 14-16). A test was made for ten days, and it was shown that Daniel and his companions were fairer in countenance and fatter in flesh than those who indulged in the eating of the king's meat. This meat and wine would have been pleasant to the palate, but would have meant a compromise of the conscience. It is obligatory upon God's children today to abstain from that which is contrary to his law.

2. Spiritual insight (v. 17). Because of Daniel's loyalty to God, Nebuchadnezzar's dream was revealed to him (2:31-45), and he was given visions sketching the whole history of the world.

3. Mental growth (vv. 17-20). Daniel and his companions were found to be ten times superior in matters of wisdom and understanding to their comrades. Those who abstain from indulgence in the use of strong drinks have clearer minds and are thus better equipped mentally for their work than those who indulge therein.

4. Their social and political preference (v. 19). They stood before the king. No higher position of influence and honor could have been given them.

5. Their temporal influence (v. 21). They were all advanced to positions of influence, and Daniel became president of the college of wise men, and the prime minister of the nation. This position he continued to hold during several dynasties.

Good Actions

Do you act as if you had ten thousand years to throw away. Death stands at your elbow. Be good for something, while you live and it is in your power. What remains but to live easy and cheerful, and crowd one good action so close to another that there may be the least empty space between them.

Habit

Habit is the magistrate of our lives; and, therefore, we should see that we have good habits.—Lord Bacon.

OF LOST MINES

THE STORY OF LAS PLACITAS

THEY were sitting on their heels in the shade of a corral fence, these two southwesterners, one day in the spring of 1880. It was at a place not far from Santa Fe, that center of romance and excitement for the whole western country. As they talked about things old and new, never dreaming what madness was in store for them, old Jesse Martin came riding up, all steamed up over something.

"Look at this, boys," he said, fairly stuttering. "I've got the richest thing on top of this here earth."

"This" was a handful of ore—ore so rich that the two friends caught the contagion and grew as excited as Martin.

"Where'd you get it, Jess?" they asked, eagerly.

"I ain't a-goin' to tell you," was the answer. "Not now, boys, I ain't. I got a partner in Santa Fe, and I'm goin' to tell him first. Then when we git everything filed, I'll let you in on it."

All the pleading they could do would not move Martin from this decision. He rode off finally toward Santa Fe with his ore and his news, leaving them to wonder where in the world he had found such a bonanza. Had he run across the Adams diggings, or the Hatchet mine? Pshaw, those places were too far south for Martin to find. This must be something a lot nearer home.

Nearer home—why, perhaps they could ask some questions of the Mexicans and Indians thereabouts, and find out where old Martin had been. That was the idea! Hastily they caught up their horses, rode forth, and began to take up Martin's trail. Oh yes, said someone here and someone else there, the old man had passed this way, or he had ridden yonder. We saw him just a day or so ago. He was coming from thus-and-such a direction. So the pair rode in that direction. And sure enough, they finally came to a claim, all regularly staked. In the prospect hole was ore—ore like that he had showed them—very rich ore.

The two men were greatly pleased with their forethought in tracing down the location. With business-like promptness, they staked their claims alongside Martin's. From these new mines-in-the-making they gathered a few samples, and then they raced back to an assayer, wild with curiosity. How would the ore turn out?

The assayer grew excited with them. Hastily he prepared for the business of extracting gold, as they watched the process with eager eyes. At last—

In the bottom of the crucible lay a button of something. Now for the acid test—would it prove to be gold? With trembling hands the assayer poured in the acid—and the button did not cut! Eureka! They were worth fortunes!

They rushed back to their claims. The news had already spread, in that strange manner with which the word of new-found gold always has spread, and men were coming in to stake claims as near to theirs as possible.

Then came a crowd from Santa Fe. At its head were Jesse Martin and—Governor Lew Wallace! So that was the partner! The news ran ahead of them—Jesse's samples had assayed $75 to $100 to the ton. Everyone laughed with glee—everyone cheered.

In three days Las Placitas accumulated a population of 10,000 souls. Everyone was gold-crazy—the golden phantom had led them to fortune and they had left their wits behind when they set out to follow her. And yet—

Some of the more sober souls began to quiet down. It was just time to make more assays, to see just how far the gold spread out, to learn just how rich it would run.

The assays were made. They showed no value at all.

The shock was tremendous. Men refused at first to believe it. They argued angrily that there was some mistake. They knew that they had found gold. The assayer must be a fool, not to know his business. He could not find gold when it was right under his nose.

Then someone thought of looking for Jesse Martin. He had "the richest thing on top of this here earth," did he? Well, he'd better explain himself.

But Martin had vanished from sight—and with him disappeared also $4,000 in real money—money that he had obtained from Lew Wallace and other prominent men of Santa Fe. He had "lit out" for parts unknown as soon as the rush set in. He was too keen an old codger to risk discovery and retribution.

But the mine—that was still there, and the rich ore had most certainly come from his claim! So it had—but not originally. Martin had salted the hole with high-grade from another mine.

And the assay—that button of gold which the acid would not cut! It was merely a crystallization, and not gold at all.

Ten days later Las Placitas had again become a desolate spot in the hills. Only thousands of tin cans sparkled and glittered in the New Mexico sun—just as shining as had been the hopes of the ten thousand, just as worthless as the claims they staked.

DuPage Attorney Named Democratic Congressional Cand.

Joseph S. Perry, attorney and Democratic political leader of DuPage county, was recipient recently of double honors in his district. In a surprise move his party's county control committee tendered him endorsement as Congressional nominee in the 11th district for Spring primaries nine months hence. Then, Tuesday (July 23rd) DuPage County Circuit Judge Max F. Allen renamed him to a two-year term as master in chancery.

Perry's nomination as congressional candidate would probably fit him against the incumbent, former State's Attorney Chauncey W. Reed of DuPage county, for one of the most interesting contests in local political annals. In 1932 the young dynamic Glen Elyn lawyer, entering the political lists for the first time, gave the veteran Reed the hardest battle of the latter's career for state's attorney. Since then Perry has been out of the spotlight although active in a backstage role. Furnishing the first effective leadership in the history of the Democratic party in DuPage county. In the brief space of two years Perry shattered the Republican reign that endured in DuPage county since the Civil war. As central committee chairman, last November he replaced three of the G. O. P. old guard with a trip of his men in as many important county offices.

Spry, youthful, and one of the most personally popular figures ever to stride across the local political horizon, Perry is believed by observers to outclass Reed in the home county. According to the experts, if he is able to expand his popularity to the remainder of the 11th district he will provide a genuine threat to the Republican wheelhorse.

MANY thousands of home owners have now had one or even two heating seasons in which to judge gas heat. Now they know its many advantages over other heating methods, other types of fuel. They've saved hours of the wearying drudgery of shoveling coal and hauling ashes because gas heat is automatic. After an entire heating season walls and furnishings are still clean. There is no soot, no dirt or grime. They know, too, how comparatively little it costs to have the benefits of this care-free heating service.

Gas heat does not reduce heating costs — but it does give you far more for the money you spend. Gas heat saves you worry, labor. It gives you household cleanliness. It provides your home with comforts never before possible. For these services, for these countless conveniences, gas heat asks only a few cents more a week. But in return, gas heat will give you greater dollar and cents value than any other heating method you can name.

Investigate gas heat today. Ask to have an engineer survey your home and give you an accurate estimate. You will learn quickly just how much it will cost to provide your home with all the advantages gas heat offers.

GAS HEAT PLUS INSULATION

Gas heat offers a new service. You may accept a plan whereby the roof of your house is fully insulated with the finest of materials. This insulation provides a double benefit — keeping the heat out in Summer, keeping heat inside in Winter. Heat losses are radically reduced, fuel bills cut. Pay for this unique insulation plan on a budget basis—a small monthly payment with your gas bill.

YOUR SAFETY BRAKES ON CONGRESS

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
 National Chairman, Sentinels of the Republic

Among the amendments recently proposed at Washington are several whose effect would be to scrap the Constitution and the Supreme Court and assign all their authority to Congress.

Is Congress worthy of so overwhelming a vote of confidence? Is it capable of exercising wisely such vast powers? Let's see what it might mean to us in America, if Congress, uncontrolled by the Constitution, were suddenly to have all the authority now exercised by certain legislative bodies and dictators in Europe.

It could mean, for example, the end of Home Rule. A majority of Congressmen, thus free of constitutional restraints, could, if they desired, supplant your own mayor or governor with a dictator or alphabetical commission from Washington. They could change the land laws of Pennsylvania, the election laws of Georgia, or the traffic laws of your home town. And, short of revolution, you'd have to take it and like it.

It could mean the death of personal liberty in America. If a majority of unhampered Congressmen didn't like your religion or your politics, or your economic theories, they could pass laws to jail or expatriate you for them.

Suppose a majority in Congress wanted to penalize you for too free an expression of your political opinions...

Suppose they decided that you couldn't attend any neighborhood political rally under penalty of going to jail...

Suppose they determined that your children shouldn't go to schools of your choice, but only to schools approved by Washington...

Suppose they wanted to take your home away from you without compensation to erect thereon a statue to, say, Huey Long...

Under the restraints exercised by the people through their Constitution they couldn't do these things today. But if Congressional authority superseded our Fundamental Law and its Bill of Rights, all Congress would have to do would be to pass the necessary acts, and any or all of them would be accomplished.

Of course, no one would say that the present Congress would pass such acts, even if it had the power. But no one can say either what a future Congress, unrestrained by the Constitution, might attempt. Who, twenty-five years ago, could have imagined a Germany or a Russia governed as those nations are today? Unlimited power, granted to legislative groups and dictators, made it possible.

Don't let them scrap the Constitution, which has protected the rights of American citizens for a century and a half, and will continue to protect them as long as it is preserved!

Mrs. James Sherwood spent Tuesday in Chicago, visiting with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward LaMaureaux.

NEWS-BULLETIN:
In 1912 Mayor Edward F. Dunne, Democrat, was elected governor. He made a good governor. His only fault was when he urged the giving of women their vote. In his campaign for re-election the women remembered him and voted against him to a man. When Governor Dunne turned the state government over to Frank O. Lowden, Republican, the affairs of state were in a good condition; the state was nearly free from debt. Governor Lowden followed in the footsteps of Governor Dunne, the only difference was the party. Governor Lowden was the last republican governor that we have had, then came the Small administration, one of spending with no thought of how the bills were to be paid. It can be called the Small-Igoe combination, they worked hand in hand. It was one of the most disgraceful deals ever made; Small dealing out jobs for votes. The result was that when Emmerson took over the office the state was in a bankrupt condition. Poor Louie, he tried to keep his word, but the gang was too much for him.

Now for the 1936 primary. Frank W. McClure, Democrat, of Abingdon, a member of the House, announced himself as a candidate for governor. Mr. McClure voted on the bills that came up in the interest of the taxpayers. He voted for the old age pension, but he with all other members, Senators as well as the Assemblymen, failed to notice that that bill would give us $15 per month from the federal government and $30 from the state. Another question arises in that he has not offered any plan whereby the money is to be raised. Still Mr. McClure is the only candidate on the democratic side who is free from the Chicago-Joliet forces.

Senator Earl B. Searcy, Republican, has announced himself for governor on the Republican side. He is positively independent—as free from the galvanized Republican—Democratic ring as McClure is but the same thing must be said him as McClure, neither one saw the mistake in the old age pension bill, or have any plan for the gaining of the monies to pay us. Still if the voters will listen to an old man who wants to see the State of Illinois regain its fair name, they will choose two clean men to head the tickets. Democrats, vote for McClure; Republicans, vote for Searcy. I don't think that party lines will cut much of a figure in Illinois this election—it will be the candidates. CHARLES L. SYLVESTER

TINLEY 14 — MOKENA 6

Well folks the slump has passed away but what a depression is left, and if you look you will find the Aces right in the center of it. The way the kids played ball I wouldn't mind betting that the girls team could take them to camp.

Maybe if they played on some other day besides Sunday they could do better because it appears that Saturday night sure wrecks them.

A person on the sidelines would think that they had never played ball before; some of the most daring and showy plays in history were surely surpassed by the boys without a doubt.

It appears like the family is going to have to see that their young ones are home early and get their sleep or else stay home. There may as well not be a pitcher on the mound, without any support at all they think he should pitch himself to death.

Well to get down to the game—if you can call it that.

Tinley scored first, getting 3 runs in the 2nd, 1 in the 5th, 1 in the 6th, and 9 in the 7th. Mokena scored 5 runs in the 5th, 1 in the 8th. Cappel tried hard but it was useless with no support behind him he asked to be taken out. George didn't want to go in, but he was put up against two batters, and then "Shorty" came in and finished up the game. So long, the next time there is a track meet we will let you know.

At the village board meeting Tuesday night Howard Scheiblich appeared before the board and lodged a complaint that water has backed up in the basement of his mother's home following showers and stated that the cellar floor was covered with slush and mud and that his mother recently slipped on the muddy cellar floor and in falling broke several ribs.

The dog license question also came in for much discussion. Very few dog licenses have been paid and it was decided to turn all delinquent dog owners in to Joe Kohl, township assessor and the dog owners will be assessed a town tax in town next year.

Complaint was also made that waste paper is being dumped on the village hall lot, creating a fire hazard, and orders were issued to watch for the guilty parties and order them to stop this habit.

The Clerk was instructed to purchase several new stars for the aldermen.

T.Y.O. TATTLER

Hello Folks!

After a few weeks absence we return with news of the peppy club in Tinley. The regular monthly meeting was held Monday eve. July 5. At this meeting Jackie Reed, the "ace" twirler of our peppy kittenball team, became officially, a member of our club. You will be able to glimpse this team in action next Wednesday when they again oppose the Ramblers of Blue Island, whom they have once completely trounced 9 to 3; Reed pitched superior ball, fanning 13 and allowing only 4 hits. Slugger "Dreamy" Klepper lead the T.Y.O. attack with 3 hits. Mager also starred with a triple.

Who? O, who is that dark-eyed little girl that's being rushed by that good-looking Klepper boy.

"Hello Eddie" said a sweet voice from the back seat of a large car, "Come here a minute." At these words the usually calm heart of Ed. missed a beat or two. Who were these girls and where did they hail from is the question. It couldn't be Frankfort. Oh no!

What made Emory so affectionate the other night? And what made Simmie do an about-face when entering a certain home that same night?

What made Windy so embarrassed upon arriving home Saturday night?

Was it a toothache that kept "Blondie" Olson from about town Tuesday eve.

What has made Artie so nonchalant about the women for the last few weeks?

Don't forget to see our newly uniformed team in action next Wednesday evening.

Cheerio!

WITH AN EYE TO
COOL SIMPLICITY

The smart girl has one eye on the budget and the other anticipating a rise in temperature—and makes a cool decision to include several summer sports in her wardrobe right now. It took a lot of ingenuity to design that clever yoke-cape-panel in one. It makes sewing so easy, and briefly, that cape is much cooler than a sleeve. Pattern 9354 sports an action pleat back and skirt just to help you "get places." If you find a simple flat neckline becoming, omit the dashing revers (but we like 'em). Very correct for spectator sports, office wear or week-end jaunts. Make it up in washable sport silk or shantung. Try a novel "cork" buckle and buttons.

Pattern 9354 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 yards 36 inch fabric.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

Where Uncle Sam Will Bury Billions of Gold

IN PREPARATION for another major transfer of the government's huge gold reserve, secret orders have been issued in Washington for the rush construction of a subterranean vault in the center of Fort Knox (shown here from the air), an army post 31 miles from Louisville. Into the vault will be transferred a good portion of the billions in gold now held by the government in New York and Philadelphia. The structure will be built in continuation of the policy of moving precious monetary reserves away from vulnerable cities on the coast to more isolated inland territory.

Bedtime Story for Children

DANNY FINDS A REFUGE

AS DANNY MEADOW MOUSE anxiously looked this way and that way for a place to hide from Buster Bear, a sharp, squeaky voice almost in his very ear made him jump. "What are you doing over here, Cousin Danny? Aren't you lost?" said the sharp, squeaky voice.

Danny turned quickly to find a little round hole in the ground between the roots of the tree, and just inside was the trim little head of his cousin, Whitefoot the Woodmouse.

"Oh!" cried Danny. "Buster Bear is trying to catch me and I don't know what to do."

"Come in here," replied Whitefoot promptly.

Danny didn't need a second invitation. He darted in just as Buster Bear reached the tree on the other side. Buster promptly tried again the trick by which he had so nearly caught Danny. He reached a great paw around the trunk of the tree and brought it down swiftly. But he was too late. There was no one under that big paw. Buster watched and listened, but he saw nothing and heard nothing. Then he walked around the tree to investigate. There was no sign of Danny Meadow Mouse. But between the roots of the tree was a little round hole.

"Huh!" grunted Buster Bear and began to dig furiously.

Now Buster Bear's claws are long and stout and when he sets out to dig he makes things fly. But Whitefoot the Woodmouse knows all about those great claws of Buster, and when he made that little round hole he made it right under the big roots of that tree. It didn't take Buster long to find out that it was quite useless to try to dig out Danny Meadowmouse. You see, those big roots were in the way. So after a minute or two of useless digging Buster gave up. It was foolish to waste time there when he might be hunting for and finding sweet little beechnuts. So, grumbling deep in his throat, Buster walked off and once

Meanwhile Danny Meadow Mouse had followed his cousin, Whitefoot the Woodmouse, along a little tunnel among the roots that led him some distance away from where he had entered. It was a very nice little tunnel. Danny said as much as he scampered along after Whitefoot. Whitefoot was pleased but he didn't say anything. He just scampered along and Danny followed. After a while they came out in the heart of a big, hollow stump.

OUTDOOR MEALS

AS PICNIC days are here again, we turn to our lists of good things which we have enjoyed and plan a picnic lunch. Those who find some food hard to digest will enjoy them and have no discomfort when eaten out of doors after a brisk hike, or even a stroll through the woods.

When packing a lunch, remember to put some of the goods that add zest such as green onions, fresh radishes, cucumbers and a few pickles, sweet and sour. Pickled beets, onions, chow, are all relishes which are enjoyed with the other food.

The sandwiches may be cut and made just before serving, with lettuce, a slice of cucumber and onion, as filling. Baked bean sandwiches are always enjoyed for a hearty meal. Serve them with sliced sour pickle.

Most picnic lunches are made up of starchy and sugar foods. Some of these are needed but the alkaline foods will be needed or headaches and indigestion will result.

Fruits, green vegetables, celery, tomatoes, are all good to combine with the sandwiches, rolls and cakes. Meats are acid forming foods and should be used sparingly.

With the crisp lettuce carried in a towel, well wrapped, add sliced oranges or tomatoes or apples and serve with a french dressing all prepared and carried in a tight jar or bottle.

With all the disadvantages, snakes, mosquitoes, poison ivy, the more we go on picnics, the more we learn

A LITTLE NEW SOUL

By ANNE CAMPBELL

A LITTLE new soul came down today On a sunlit cloud, from far away. She stole the blue from the morning skies, And a star for each of her pretty eyes. She grasped at the dawn, and in her fingers The rosy glow of the morning lingers.

A little new soul came down to lift Our weary hearts with her hopeful gift. She brushed by the sun and plucked its gold.

And she brought God's love for our arms to hold. A little new baby, with dreams in her eyes,

Came to show us the pathway to Paradise!

Science Unable to Find Cures for Odd Aversions That Are Painful to Those Afflicted

An aversion, amounting almost to terror, of cats is not uncommon, particularly among women. Snakes, too, have a repellent effect on many people. Less frequent is terror of the house-fly. A doctor recently stated, however, that among his patients were two men in whom the buzzing of a fly inspired profound fear. At the sight of a fly crawling on the window panes one of these men immediately starts to tremble violently, and as soon as the fly begins to buzz beads of perspiration break out on his forehead and he has to be led from the room. This man was an officer decorated for bravery during the World War. Many famous people have been similarly affected, although normal in other respects.

The Roman emperor Domitian could not bear the distant hum of a moving fly. Marechal d'Albret, related to the French king, Henry IV, a man of exceptional bravery, is said to have been stricken with terror if he saw a pig. The duke of Epemont fainted at the sight of a hare, while a mouse sufficed to make the distinguished Italian writer, Caraccioli, ill for several days.

That inoffensive creatures should inspire such fear in normally brave men is strange. Still more remarkable is the horror some people have for the sound of a certain word or the sight of some inanimate object. A chevalier of Alcantara is said to have fainted every time he heard the word "Lana"—Spanish for wool—although the actual "feel" of woolen clothing, repugnant to many people, did not affect him. The sight of an eclipse of the moon also caused the great Francis Bacon to swoon, while the famous Italian doctor, Scaliger, shuddered at the sight of cress. Even more astonishing was the case of a squire of Bolston, of whom it is said that when obliged to listen to the twenty-fifth chapter of Isaiah and certain texts from the Book of Kings "he felt an icy hand upon the top of his head and a sensation of intense cold around the heart."

Easier to understand, especially by vegetarians, is the aversion that one of the daughters of Frederik, king of Naples, had for meat. Taxed by her sisters with being weak-willed she once placed a small piece of cooked meat in her mouth, whereupon, to their great consternation, "she fell into a fit, remained unconscious for half an hour, and lay ill with a fever for many weeks."

These aversions and phobias still baffle doctors, for the victim is nearly always normal in other respects. Some doctors believe them to be due to a slight kink in the brain and associate them with a mild form of insanity. Others suggest they are hereditary, while psychoanalysts maintain that they are due to the influence of the subconscious mind impressed by some apparently insignificant incident during the life of the victim. Supporters of the theory of reincarnation believe that all these inexplicable dislikes and uncontrollable fears are vestiges of some happening in a former life.

One thing that the study of these cases has revealed is the fact that phobias and aversions do not necessarily indicate a flaw in the intellect. As a general rule, only the more intelligent men are thus afflicted—and the more developed and active their brain the more intense is their particular aversion.

The phobias most commonly encountered are those caused by the smell of flowers or fruits.—London Tit-Bits.

QUESTION BOX
by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a coed, at a well known college, and am crazy about a boy my own age who goes to the same college. He gave me a lovely cigarette holder for my birthday and his birthday is next Saturday. I saw a whisky flask, in a shop window, which was made to look like the seven of spades. Don't you think that is a cute present to buy him?

Sincerely,
LILY KUPPS.

Answer: The present is all right, but he's liable to leave it on a table in some fraternity house, and some other student might come along with the eight of spades and take it.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have been engaged to a young man for nearly six months and we were to be married in June, but last night he confessed to me that he had a wooden leg. What shall I do?

Yours truly,
DORA KNOB.

Answer: Break it off.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My wife and I had an argument last night about the army. My wife says, in order for a man to be buried with "military honors" he must be a captain, while I say he must be a general. Which if us is right?

Yours truly,
LEW TENANT.

Answer: You are both wrong. In order for a man in the army to be buried with full military honors he must be dead.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Every month, a club I belong to, holds a meeting at which all the members have to tell a story on a subject which is told us a week before the meeting. The subject for our next meeting is: "The Stingiest Man I Know." Will you tell me the stingiest man you ever met?

Truly yours,
O. COMM TELLMEE.

Answer: The stingiest man I ever heard of was a man who fell overboard and as he was swimming ashore a policeman hollered to him that it was $50 fine for swimming in that river and when the man heard that he just threw up his hands and sunk.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I bought a new suit, the other day, and the first time I put it on, the coat split up the back. How do you account for that?

Yours truly,
I. PICTICT.

Answer: The buttons were sewed on too tight.

Good Samaritan Aids Helpless Birds

THEY were just three baby sparrows in need of protection when Frances A. Urban, fourteen-year-old high school girl, saw them flopping about helplessly in her back yard in Hollywood, Calif., and decided to befriend them. At her home, the girl placed them in a cage near a window. A day later she heard a flutter and saw a grown sparrow, then two, beating wildly against the screen. Suspecting the visitors were the birds' parents, she placed the cage in the yard and opened the door. One of the grown birds flew in with worms and fed them. Each day, now, they are taken into the yard to be fed in that fashion. The girl plans to release the birds as soon as they are able to fly.

Sunday, August 4, Tinley Park played a return game with Mokena and was it a thriller, just ask anyone that was there; the boys from Tinley were on a hitting spree and they said it with hits that counted by putting over a nine run rally in the seventh inning to make the score 14 to 5; disposing of two of Mokena's pitchers, Wes. Cappel and George Lauffer; the rally being stopped by little "Shorty" Lauffer, the team's left fielder and a south-paw. Tinley opened the game by scoring three runs in the second inning and this was good until the fifth when the boys from Mokena scored 5 runs to take the lead which they held until the seventh inning, then Tinley turned on the steam; scoring nine runs to make it 14 to 6 going into the eighth inning. Pitcher Frank was in a bad spot in the fifth inning when Mokena had the bases loaded with no one out, but pulled himself up to two-out before the boys from Mokena scored five runs with some good clean hits. Tinley Park and Mokena always put up a good game for the teams are pretty well matched, but this Sunday was one of those days that Tinley was in a hitting mood and Mokena happened to be the victim. Mokena is no set-up for any ball team and cannot be judged by this game; they play good clean ball and don't depend on the umpire to help them out.

The Triangle Club of Tinley Park is trying to give the home town a winning base ball team and the boys are working hard in appreciation of the large crowds turning out to see them.

The boys from Tinley Park practice most every night in the week besides giving up their Sundays and it is a lot of help to see a good crowd attend the home games. It gives them encouragement to play better ball, so let's all come to the games at home. Next Sunday Tinley Park will play Steger at the Tinley field. This game will be worth seeing as Steger gave Tinley a bad licking at Steger and Tinley is out for revenge.

IN MEMORIAM

In fond memory of our dear father and grandfather Mr. Henry Siebrandt who passed away one year ago August 10, 1934.

Sad and sudden was the call
Of one so dearly loved by all
It was a bitter grief, a shock
To part with one we loved so
The pleasures that our hearts
Once knew,
Is saddened and lonesome after you.
With God's help we hope and pray
That we will meet again some day.
